Context and approach

In Bagamanoc, women carry much of the burden when typhoons disrupt income and force families to evacuate. Most support remains short-term relief, with little investment in durable livelihoods and anticipatory action.

With the local government, the project strengthens five women's associations through start-up kits and enterprise training, capacity development on disaster preparedness and anticipatory action, and support for ecosystem-based solutions.

Approximate project location.

Project outputs

- Provide start-up kits and enterprise training to five women's associations
- Train 300 women in livelihood diversification and financial literacy
- Build capacity on disaster preparedness and anticipatory action
- Support ecosystem-based and nature-based adaptation activities
- Women run small enterprises that withstand typhoon disruption
- Communities act ahead of storms with women-led preparedness
- Bagamanoc has a replicable model for gender-responsive resilience
